

Assignment #1 – HTML

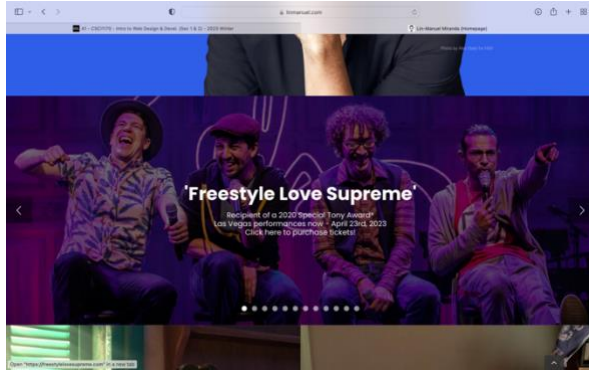

Part 2: Research

URL: <https://www.linmanuel.com>

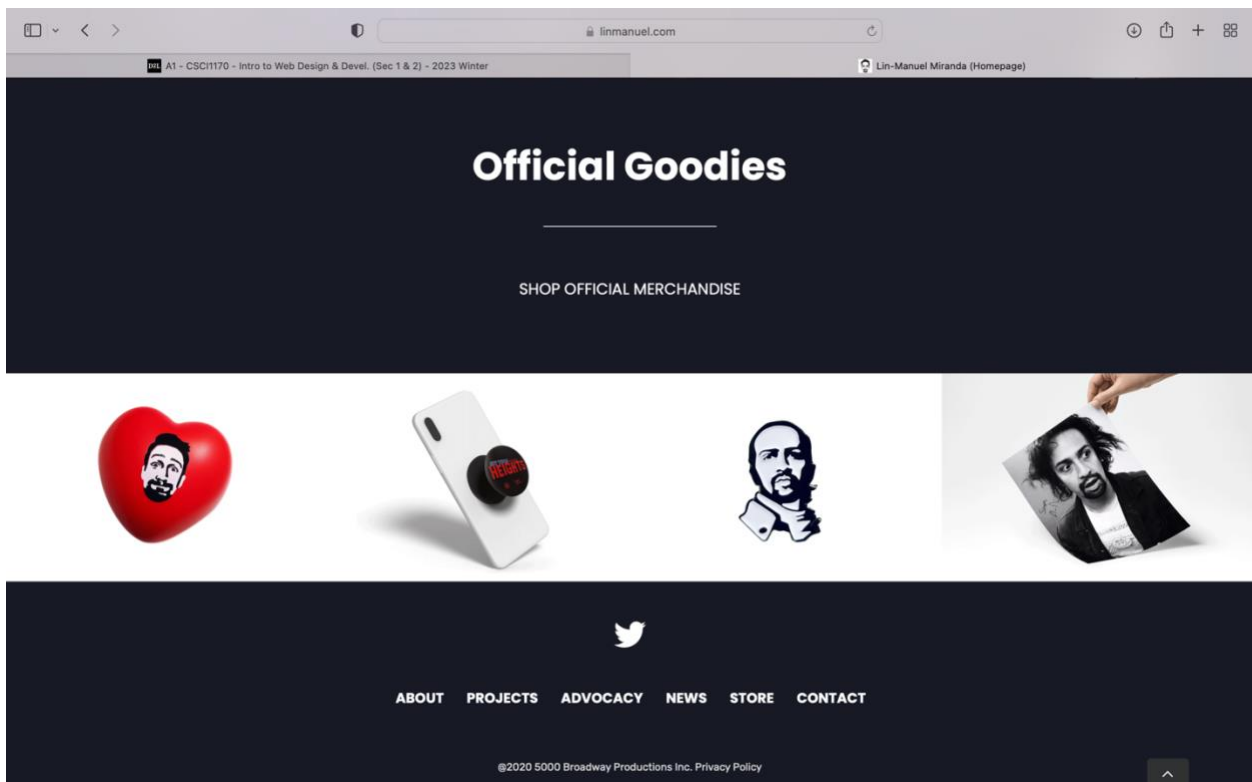

After clicking the URL to Lin-Manuel's website, this is the first thing viewers see. This is great design because it is simple. There's not a lot of information, which does not overload viewer's when first visiting the website. The navigation bar being located at the top right of the page makes for easy website utilization, which would help potential employers as well.

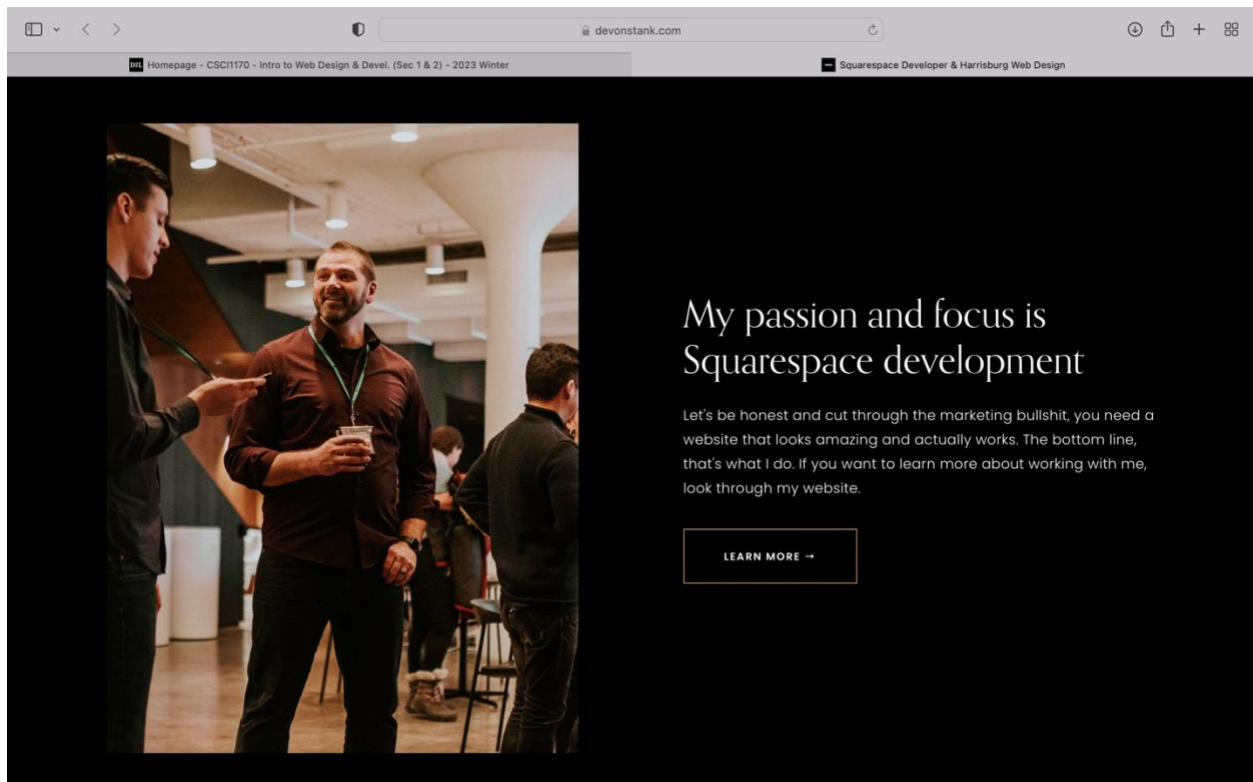

After scrolling down the homepage, the first thing viewers see is a slide composed of Lin Manuel-Miranda's main works and involvements. This is good design because it gives the users a sense of Lin-Manuel's personality and what the website will entail. It shows a lot of character, something that is great for employee seekers.

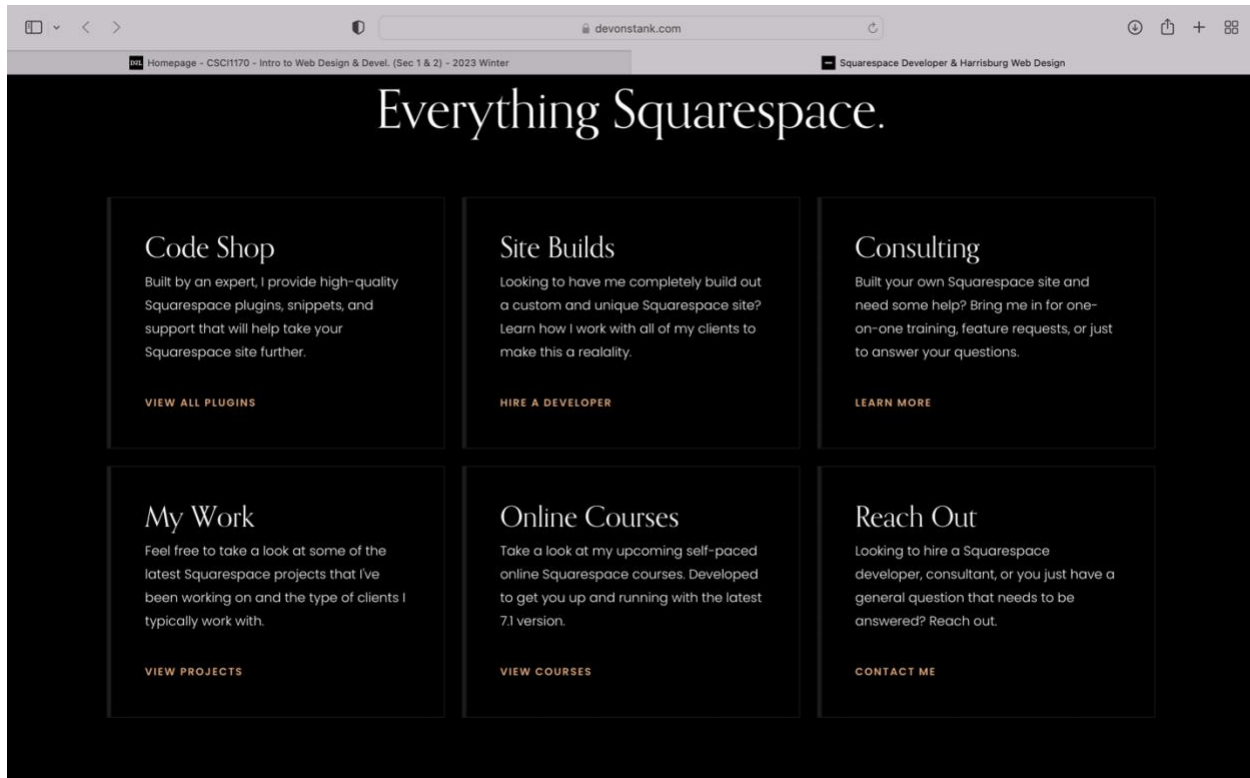

The contents of the navigation bar are found at the bottom of the webpages. The bottom right also has an arrow pointing upwards that brings the user (if clicked) to the top of the webpage they're on. This is good design because it really helps with website navigation, which would help a patron in their research of a potential hire.

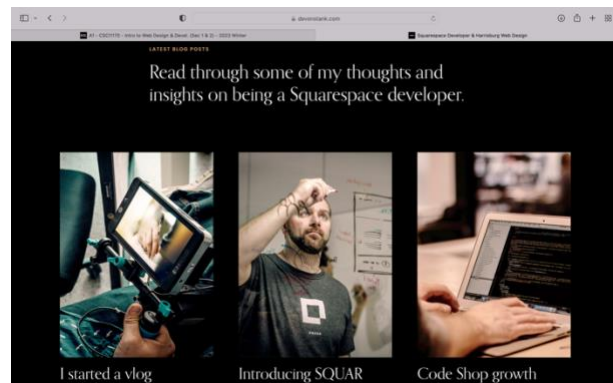

URL: <https://devonstank.com>

After scrolling down the homepage the first thing viewers see is the screenshot above. This is great design because it gives users an idea of Devon's personality. There's also a "Learn More" link to explore more about him. These design features are great for an employer wanting to learn about a possible employee.

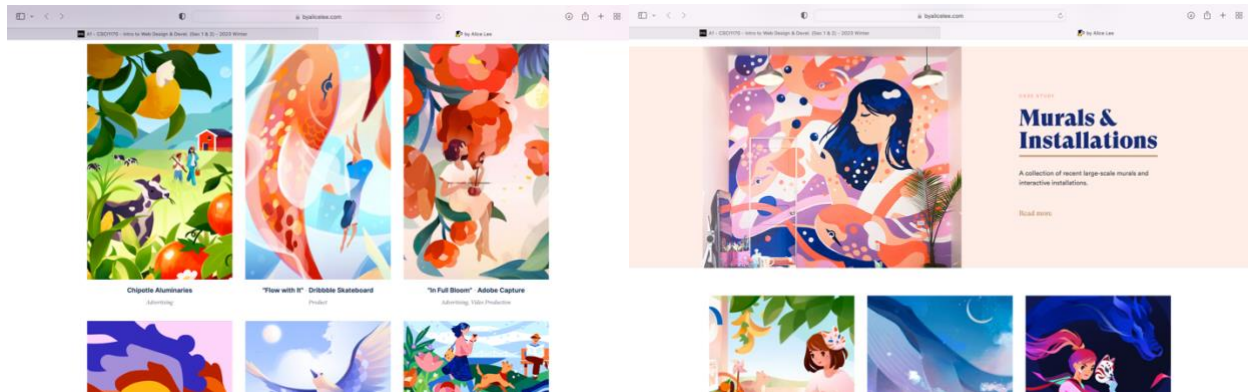

After scrolling down from the previous screenshot, viewers will see this screenshot. This is great design because it gives users a brief explanation to several skills that he is capable of, which is great for patrons. It allows viewers to get an understanding of what may proceed by clicking “View All Plugins”, “Hire A Developer”, etc. links.

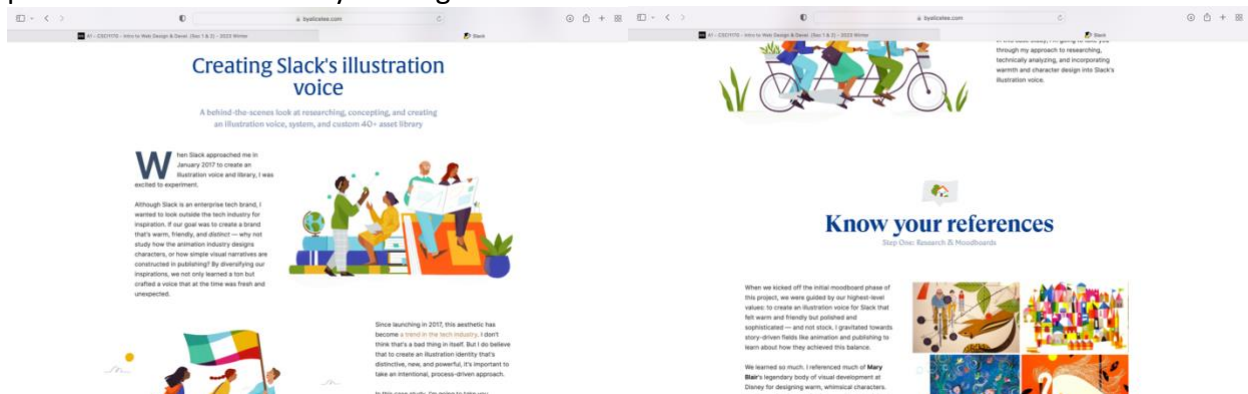

The rest of the homepage after the previous screenshot consists of these three screenshots. This is good design because all these sections include projects and ideas that directly relate to him, the focus of the website. This allows employers to get a grasp of his capabilities.

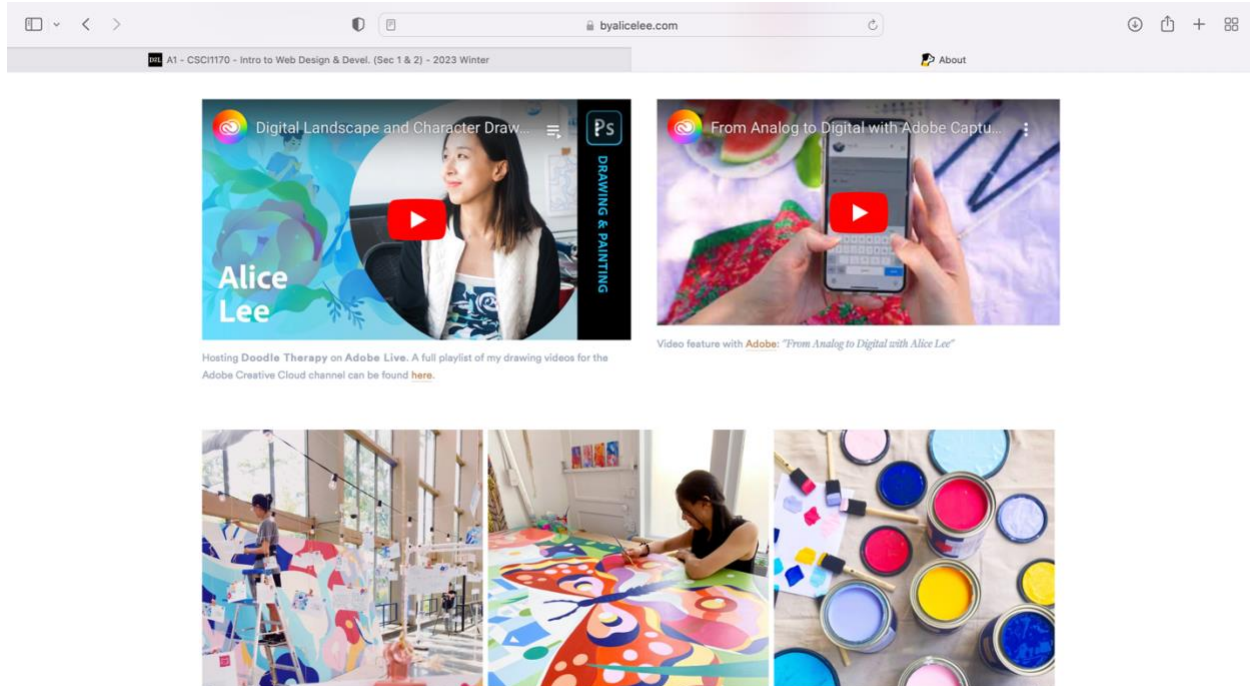

URL: <https://www.byalicelee.com>

The homepage of Alice Lee's website is mainly just made up of her artistic creations and a couple of case studies. This is good design because it is simplistic, and it represents her character and career very well. Employers can easily learn about her through these artistic pieces and case studies by clicking on them.

The two screenshots above are what the start of one of Alice Lee's case studies resembles. This is great design because there is a mix of text and illustrations. This mix makes it easier for patrons to read the case study since it isn't just a huge blob of text.

This screenshot is found at the bottom of the “About” page. This is good design because the images and especially the videos, really express herself to patrons. They give the patrons really a good understanding of Alice’s personality, mentality, ideas and so much more.
